Go back to work, BEA strikers to be told

Councillor Horan 'seeing his solicitors'

TALKS BETWEEN management and union officials aimed at a settlement of the unofficial strike of British European Airways leading to a joint statement to be recommended to go back to work.

Union representatives are to report on the discussions to the men at a mass meeting to-morrow.

The joint statement said: "The Transport and General Workers' Union confirmed that they would encourage their members to return to work on the basis of the document agreed on Saturday B.E.A. gave assurances that, in any event, no future unofficial action, there would be no discrimination against those who have signed the document."

"B.E.A. confirm that its policy in the event of any future unofficial action would continue to be, as in the present case, to consult with union officials concerned before taking any action against the employees involved."

Church to probe religious bias

Because they refused to censure the Bishop of Woolwich and others did not mean that they agreed with all they said. In fact, as a Church they clearly took issue with such writings about the relationship between law and love. What they must also do was to accept their sincerity and their desire for the welfare of the people in their care.

"It has been suggested that the influence of our report on our young people would be to encourage them to deny their Christian writers who have been associated with the new religion."

"I submit that to censure them in any apparatus would be to deny their spirit which is more than anything else, to those who are sincere."

"Unless we can let people see that we stand not on some moral basis but on a simple self-righteousness but right where they are, we will get nowhere."

Hour meeting

The statement came after about an hour's meeting at Terminal House, London, between four T.G.W.U. representatives - Mr. Jack Heritage, national officer; Mr. John Cousins, London Airport representative; Mr. Burt Fry, divisional organiser; and Mr. W. Wilkinson, engineering chief executive officer.

As trade union representatives went down the stairs at Terminal House, over 100 strikers who were in the hall shouted at them.

Mr. John Cousins, who has been in the centre of the dispute, which is over a package pay deal for porters, said he could say nothing now.

Boos greeted two union officials as they made their way from Terminal House through 300 men standing outside, but they turned to cheers as Mr. Cousins followed.

Standing on the steps, he told the men: "The whole matter will be gone into at a mass meeting to-morrow morning."

Re-housing

"Some members I understand, also did not like me giving assurances to people in my ward that they would be re-housed after slum clearance."

"Some of them did not like the fact that I took back for the committee's further consideration certain minutes dealing with property deals at the last council meeting."

Support for Councillor Horan came from Alderman Sir Cecil McKee, who said today he strongly disapproved of the action of the housing committee in not re-appointing him as vice-chairman.

"This was the work of a caucus, and it is repugnant to me as it is to many other members of the Corporation."

Sir Cecil added that he hoped the decision would be reversed.

At the committee meeting, Councillor Horan's only support came from Councillor James McCarroll, Ulster Protestant, and Alderman John Brennan, of the National Party. The Unionist members voted against him.

Man accused of assaulting girls on Belfast bus

A 50-YEAR-OLD labourer was remanded in custody to June 21 for a medical examination after appearing at Belfast Magistrate's Court to-day on three charges.

James Pile, 25 Ardenvohr Street, Belfast, pleaded not guilty to two charges of assault and one of disorderly behaviour.

Two girls, June Taylor and Janet Rhodes, both students from Bangor, gave evidence of being assaulted by the defendant on a Belfast Corporation bus yesterday.

June Taylor said that about 12.45 p.m. she and two friends were on a Castlereagh Road bus in Donagall Place. They were laughing and joking among themselves as she saw Pile go upstairs and then come back on to the bus.

"He asked me was I laughing at him and I told him I wasn't," she said.

"He called me a liar and then grabbed me by the throat with both hands. Then he grabbed Janet."

"No provocation"

She told the R.M. Mr. Bradley McCall, that they did not give any provocation for the incident.

Janet Rhodes said that when they were sitting on the bus she saw Pile, who was sitting further up the bus, looking at them.

The three of them were laughing and Pile went upstairs. He came back down and after they denied that they were laughing at him he grabbed Janet by the throat and started shaking her.

"The defendant grabbed me and I started to kick him," she said, adding that a bus inspector arrived, and a statement to the police.

Grand Jury foreman praises the RUC

THE LORD MAYOR of Belfast, Councillor William Jenkins, to-day praised the efficiency of the R.U.C.

He was speaking as foreman of the Grand Jury at the opening of Belfast City Council.

He had high praise in particular for Detective Head Constable Anthony Kernohan for his work in connection with a case in which a man is charged with robbery.

The Grand Jury found two Bills in all the cases, but the Lord Mayor and other Corporation councillors on the Grand Jury abstained from voting in cases involving the Belfast Corporation.

As to Councillor Jenkins' praise of the R.U.C. and Detective Head Constable Kernohan, the Lord Chief Justice, Lord MacDermott said he would see that the remarks got to the proper quarters.

Unhappy marriage led to drink and theft - barrister

AN UNHAPPY marriage, which in turn led to drink, was given by a barrister at Belfast City Court to-day as some of the reasons why a man committed a series of offences involving office-breaking and theft and forgery.

The man, Robert Thomas McCelland, 37, dockerman and crane driver, of no fixed address, was sent to prison for two years when he admitted office breaking and stealing a cheque book and stamps.

He also admitted forging a cheque, and was fined £7 10s.

He asked for an additional 17 months for a stolen property valued at £114 to be taken into consideration.

Mr. Michael Lavery (instructed by Joseph Donohoe), who appeared for McCelland, told the court that he had a number of previous convictions for theft and forgery.

But McCelland, he said, now wanted to make a new life for himself and his family and he had come from Eire to get matters cleared up.

The Lord Chief Justice, Lord MacDermott, told a serious view of the case. You have had a number of chances and enough warnings and yet you return to the same sort of thing making a regular nuisance of yourself.

"Breaking and entering must be kept under control, for some cases young people have to go to jail for first offences."

Arms ban

Mr. McConnell also spoke of his committee's investigations into the arms trade in Africa and said he agreed with an investigation that had been made that it was not the Churches to advocate a policy of total sanctions but they agreed that the British Government should prohibit the export of all arms to South Africa.

Dr. Hugo Heslett, Finaghy, said that the arms trade in Africa seemed to be lower than it was a generation ago due to the widespread publicity that the subject receives.

Certain magazines, newspapers and television programmes kept emotions on the boil rather than allow them to cool off.

He wondered that sometimes difficult situations arise between boys and girls.

An appeal to writers and broadcasters on sexual problems to remember the effect they have on the rank and file was made by Rev. Alfred Martin, Finaghy.

He said that when some of the television programmes and a slick was put over something that was contrary to the Christian point of view, an answer should be made in the same programme and not months afterwards.

The report was received.

Disturbing

Rev. James Bridgett, presenting the Social Services Committee report, said that one disturbing trend was the rise in the incidence of V.D.

During the last six years there had been a 57 per cent increase in the number of patients attending clinics in Northern Ireland, a four per cent increase in female patients.

Mr. Bridgett said that he had received a report which he saw recently a report on cases appearing before the Juvenile Court. Magistrate. This showed that girls aged from 12 to 15 had had sexual experience, many of them for the sake of material profit.

He felt that pornography literature was one of the factors helping to create both problems.

Toronto band for Salvation Army festival

THE EARLSCOURT Citadel Band from Toronto, will take part in the 15th anniversary celebrations of the Salvation Army in Belfast on July 7.

The band will also give a festival in the Wellington Hall, Belfast, at the chairmanship of the Lord Mayor, on the same night.

Coinciding with the actual date of the centenary of the movement, the Lord Mayor, Commissioner William Davidson, an Ulster-born, is in the United States, will visit the public relations officer and Commissioner and Mrs. Scowen, Australia, will visit Lurgan.

Growers winning battle against market charges

THE MAY'S MARKET growers in Belfast are winning their battle to have the new charges reduced.

The Corporation estates and markets committee, after a lengthy discussion, to-day recommended that the charges be reduced by 10 per cent.

The new charges, which came into operation early this year, were based on the size and weight of the vehicle and not, as before, on the produce itself.

The growers have been paying them - and under protest.

The move at to-day's committee meeting followed discussion between Mr. John Lammont, the estates superintendent, and the representative of the horticultural council of the Ulster Farmers' Union, which looks after the interests of the growers.

A 10 per cent reduction would mean that anybody paying 25s to the market would now only pay 22s 6d.

The committee also agreed to reduce the stallage charge by 10 per cent from 5s to 4s 6d.

A STORE BLAZE
